News From the Hill

News From the Hill: November 5, 2018

On Capitol Hill, the November mid-term election has been the sole focus of policymakers for the past few weeks. The balance of power for the 116th Congress, which will convene next year, and the legislative agenda for the end of the year "lame duck" session are both dependent on the results of the November 6th vote.

The primary issue left to be resolved before the current (115th) Congress adjourns in December is how to handle the seven unfinished appropriations bills, which include divisive issues such as border wall funding and environmental programs. The seven unfinished bills for Fiscal Year (FY) 2019 are operating on a level-funding Continuing Resolution (CR) until December 7th. There will likely be much negotiating over the coming weeks in an effort to find compromise and advance final spending measures with the wild card being the White House and its willingness to insist on stated priorities.
